Dennis Lehane has found a novel way to raise funds for a cause he believes in. The best-selling scribe has joined with Protect.org to produce T-shirts featuring fictional names and places from his books. For instance, there's a T advertising Kenzie & Gennaro Investigations from "Gone Baby Gone," Ashecliffe Hospital from "Shutter Island," and Hurley's Drive-In from "Mystic River." Lehane's the latest author to work with Protect.org, a political lobby focused on protecting children from abuse and exploitation. Other authors involved include Andrew Vachss, Chuck Klosterman, Joe R. Lansdale, and Nick Hornby.

“ In a perfect world it would be great if divorced parents could each spend 50% of the time with they're kids. Unfortunately it doesn't work out that way. Even in joint custody cases one of the parents (usually the mother) has primary custody. The courts aren't going to split the year in half or have kids going back and forth to different homes every day. It's just not in the kids best interest.

It's interesting that no one has questioned Bridget Moynihan's decision to move her and their son from NY to L.A. They lived together in NY and Brady works at his profession in MA. But she gets none of the criticism for moving the boy 3000 miles away from his dad. And I don't care how much money he has. It's just not practical to be flying back and forth from coast to coast on a regular basis, especially during the football season.

“ We've gone way off track here. The guy took a vacation. How does that equate to being a deadbeat dad? Just because we aren't reading articles every other day about Tom Brady taking his kid to the park or the zoo, doesn't mean anything. The fact is that news outlets print what is going to stir up response and create readership and web hits. That is what sells advertising and makes money. What's going to get more of a reaction, Tom doing the perceived "right thing" or him galivanting across the globe with his supermodel girlfriend? I rest my case....

“ A "real" Father would be with his son 50% of the time in a amicable divorce situation. The every other weekend schedule BS the courts dish out is a horrible deal to the split family and the children involved. Given Tom's wealth, free time and ability to fly anywhere in the world on a moments notice one would imagine he would, seemingly, spend more time with his son at the very least. Bunching up a few weeks here and there is not the answer especially in the crucial early years of development. Again it's none of my business but perception is half of assumption.

“ "That simply is an absurd statement!"

What's absurd about it.

A non-custodial parent may want to see his kid every day but the courts say they are only guaranteed every other weekend. If the relationship between parents is bad the custodial parent may only allow what was guaranteed in the agreement.
